

Acknowledgments

It has been an honor to work with and learn from William Decker. We all owe a debt of gratitude to him and his company. Bill is a true entrepreneur in every sense of the word, having taken one of his companies public years ago. If you have been lucky enough to watch an American entrepreneur in action, then you know the magic. It was not an easy decision for Bill to form another company, Tower Orthomolecular Laboratories, having retired to the good life, though without his having taken that step this book would have never been written, for it is really a book of stories. Each case was an experiment, and none would have occurred had Bill lacked the knowledge, experience, perseverance, benevolence, and humanitarian instincts to face and overcome the obstacles and regulatory hurdles. Greed certainly wasn't the motivating factor, as no one gets rich selling vitamin C products.

Sally Jewell is an important part of this story in her own right and it has been my pleasure to work closely with her in the writing of this book. Not only has she contributed her formidable writing and editing skills to this project, but this book and a great many Pauling therapy users have benefited immeasurably from her thorough Pauling therapy knowledge and extensive experience, which has now spanned many years.

My thanks go to Jeff Fenlason, Carol Smith, William Cook, and the late Eli Raber for allowing us to invade their privacy. You are true heroes. Thanks go as well to the many others who have allowed the use of their names, such as Alan Oliver of Australia whose stories, for reasons of space, could not be included in this volume. Every story is unique and incredible,